CHAPTER 294

GEORGE A. GARDNER

S. F. 446

AN ACT to compensate George A. Gardner for injuries received while assisting in showing a dairy herd of the Mount Pleasant state hospital at the Jefferson county fair, and for loss and damages resulting therefrom, including hospital and medical expenses.

WHEREAS, The Mount Pleasant state hospital, Mount Pleasant, Iowa, exhibited at the Jefferson county fair, held at Fairfield, Iowa, August 8 to August 11, 1922, a dairy herd, including an animal named Sir Korndyke Hades, in charge of George Marcilliat, their herdsman; and

WHEREAS, It was mutually agreed between George Marcilliat, as such herdsman, and Grant Enlow, another exhibitor of dairy stock at the same fair, that they and their assistants would help one another in showing their animals; and

WHEREAS, Under this agreement the said Marcilliat desiring to show his animals, directed George A. Gardner, an assistant of the said Enlow: "Go, get the big animal and take him out to show, and I will get the balance of the cattle out"; and

WHEREAS, In obeying this order, the said Gardner was attacked by the animal Sir Korndyke Hades, crushed against the building, severely bruised and his right leg fractured, and on account of these injuries, he was confined to the Jefferson county hospital for seven (7) weeks, then to his home until about December 1, 1922, and is still unable to wear a shoe on his right foot and to get about without crutches, and is advised by his physician that he will be wholly incapacitated until about June 1, 1923, and will be partially incapacitated until about September 1, 1923; and

WHEREAS, The said Gardner has a widowed mother dependent upon him for support, no means and no source of income save from his own labor
